“We are proud to extend our sponsorship with Lincoln Center, an organization redefining what it means to make the arts accessible,” said Kate Schoff, Head of Sports & Entertainment Marketing at JPMorganChase. “The arts have the power to inspire, unite, and uplift communities, and through this collaboration, we’re helping to break down barriers so that more people can experience world-class performances and creative programming. The expanded sponsorship will help power a dynamic range of music, dance, film, and culinary arts experiences:

- This year’s Summer for the City, featuring hundreds of performances, workshops, and participatory events — including the popular Festival Food Trucks with rotating food options from local chefs that reflect the breadth of cultures showcased during the summer festival.
- Beginning next season, the New York Philharmonic’s popular The Art of the Score series, which presents complete films with their soundtracks performed live. Additional details will be announced in the coming months.

While free and accessible pricing for performances are available to all LCPA presentations, Chase offers cardholders exclusive benefits, subject to availability. Details to be announced alongside programming specifics.
